Chapter 1 by Ben

Chapter 1- Him

He was born here. Here? He didn't know. You wouldn't know where after your parents leave you at 4 months old. He was left at the front steps of Patrick & Mary's Group Home. They never told him anything about his parents. They? He didn't know them. He never talked to them. Better yet, he couldn't talk. The people there never offered him any education. He knew that this would be the way is life would be. Or would it?

Chapter 2- Her

I was born in Iowa. I knew that for a fact. How? I was left at the age of 6 years old, but never taught a word. I guess that's why they left me at this weird place. Probably thought they would put some sense in us. But no. They sit around and tell us off for sitting around. What are we supposed to do? They won't teach us. I thought this would be my life. But it wasn't. Until I met this boy

When I got to him, I waved. He didn't do anything. He opened his mouth to talk, but stopped short. It was obvious that he was just like me. So I beckoned him over inside. This he understood. We walked up the marble steps inside an empty room. Luckily, I knew how to write. So, I wrote, "Do you understand me." He nodded. "Can you talk?" He shook his head no. "Do you know how to read and write?" He nodded yes.

I didn't know what this girl was doing, but I just went along with it.

"Do you want to be friend's," I wrote. He nodded his head in an awkward way. "If we can't talk and if we were going to friend's, we have to tell each other's names. What's your's?" He shook his head no. "You don't know huh," I wrote. "Neither do I." "We can make up names for each other. Write down what name you want to call me."

I didn't know what name to do so I did the first name that came to my mind, and I wrote, "Madison," after my favorite president, James Madison.

"Okay. I'll call you Luke."

Chapter 4- Life

From that point on, the two went everywhere. Thanks to the Governor of New Zealand (The two had figured out where they were) the teachers were removed permanently and were replaced by new ones. Now thanks to these kind people, Madison and Luke learned their Speech, Grammar, Math and subjects of everyday use.

The two later married each other in 2009, having two kids, Maddie, and Lucas.
